INTRODUCTION.

China, with its teeming population, is first noticed in the Sacred Scripture in connection with the return of the Jews from the dispersion over the world; "Behold, these shall come from far; and lo, these from the north and from the west, and these from the land of Sinim."

The history of the "land of Sinim" is still involved in mystery; nor are we better acquainted with the origin of the races that inhabit it.

That China, like India, is inhabited by a mixed race, cannot be doubted by such as have paid any attention to their physiognomy and institutions. Their physiognomy bears great resemblance to various African tribes of Hamitic origin. If we place the photograph of a Hottentot by the side of that of a Chinaman, we find great difficulty in distinguishing the features of the one from those of the other. Again, if we compare their institutions with those of the nations of Shemitic origin, we find them bearing great semblance to each other.

The descendants of Ham have taken to as great a variety of occupations as those of Shem and Japhet. The Phenicians, the first and most ancient navigators and colonizers, were descendants of Ham; and their institutions formed a great contrast to their stabile cousins, the Egyptians, as well as to the restless tribes of central, southern and western Africa.

Among the many conjectures respecting the origin of the Chinese there is one, which makes it probable, that Havilah, grandson of Ham, took a north-easterly direction, passed along the southern foot of the Kwanlun mountains and entering Kokonor, followed the courses of the Yellow river and the Yangtsz, whence his descendants spread over the north and south of the territory now included in the eighteen provinces, the Shan country, Siam and Anam.

The 100 families, who entered China from the N. W., appear to have been descendants of Shem, for their institutions differ greatly from those nations of Hamitic origin, whose form of government has remained unaffected by Shemitic influence.

The aborigines of China were partly subdued and civilized by the 100 families, and partly driven southward, where most of them defended themselves successfully against their northern foes, until the armies of Chi Hwangti rolled down like an avalanche, forced some to the inaccessible mountains, compelled others to intermarry with them, whose descendants call themselves the Punti population of the Kwangtung and Kwangsi provinces; and the rest to take refuge on the water, and who now, according to Chinese history, constitute the Tanka or boat population of this province.

The probable route of Havilah is thus described by Feldhoff:—
Der südwestlichen Richtung Sebas entspricht eine nordöstliche Hevilah's. Er zieht durch das heutige Biludschistan über den Gebirgszug am rechten Indusufer, das indopersische Gebirge, gegen den Hindu-Kusch hin, diesem merkwürdigen Rücken, welcher den Osten and Westen Asiens verknüpft und scheidet, und der, wenn wir uns alle Tiefländer umher unter Wasser versetzt denken, die einzige Landbrücke bildet. Von da dringt Hevilah am Südrande des Kuenlün oder Koulkun-Gebirges, welches bis nach Peking zieht und an dessen Ostende die 150 Meilen lange, 247 v. Chr. angefangene chines. Mauer, nach Inner-Asien gegen den See Kukhunor vor, allmählig in die Provinz Schensi, nach China, hinabsteigend. Seit den ältesten Zeiten ist in jener Gegend zwischen Mustag and Kuenlün jene arge Zauberei zu Hause, die im nördlichen Schamanismus später die frazzenhafteste Gestalt annimmt. . . . . . Durch die kleine and grosse Bucharei, Chorasan und Taberistan bis hervor nach Armenien and Mesopotamien, sagt Windischmann, breitet sich eine Länderstrecke aus, welche reich an Weideplätzen, den Fortschritt der ersten Völkerstämme bis nach Sina hin wie von selbst geleitet, so wie es sich denn auch durch gründliche Forschungen herausgestellt und zum Theil aus den sinesischen Geschichtsquellen selbst ergeben hat, dass von alten Zeiten her ein nur selten ganz unterbrochener Zusammenhang zwischen diesen Ländern fortgedauert hat. Diesen Zusammenhang im Auge haltend, wird es nicht unwahrscheinlich, dass jenes Chwala am kaspischen Meer, wovon dasselbe russisch Chwalinskoje More genannt werden soll, welches mann irrthümlich mit dem Chavilah oder Hevilah 1. Mos. 2,11. verglichen hat, von unserm Kuschitischen Stamme seinen Namen empfangen hat.
Von Schensi her drang in späterer Zeit auch das Volk Magogs vor; aber jene hundert Familien von einer Verwandtschaft, von denen die sinesichen Urkunden reden and deren Namen jetzt noch die Grundbenennungen der Geschlechter sind, mögen wohl Semiten gewesen sein. Dieselben fanden das Land zum Theil schon von Barbaren, deren Rohheit die sinesischen Geschichtsbücher mit einfachen Zügen schildern, besetzt; mit Barbaren, die theils and zwar nur allmählig durch patriarchalische Cultur gewonnen und zu einem geordnetern Leben geführt werden Konnten, anderntheils aber ausgerottet oder verdrängt wurden, and von welchen die letzten stets unruhigen Ueberbleibsel under dem Namen der Miau sich jederzeit in den unzugänglichen Gebirgen des westl. and südwestlichen Sinas erhalten haben. Diese Miaus, die uncultivirten Ureinwohner Sinas, sind verwandt mit dem ebenfalls Kuschitischen Stamme der Ureinwohner Tübets and gehören zu Chavilahs Nachkommen. Spätere Schriftsteller erklären die Kiong oder die östl. mit Sina gränzenden Tübetaner für Nachkommen vertriebener Miaus." Ritter. Windischmann. Feldhoff.

The struggle of races has from that time been incessant in the south of China. Cruelties of the most savage nature have been perpetrated on both sides, but the nation at large has made little impression on the aborigines in the mountain fastnesses, whose habits are the same as they were 2,000 years ago. The latter are, therefore, called the 生 shang (green or raw) aborigines, whilst those living along the plains and having partly submitted to Chinese rule, are called the 熟 ṣhuk (ripe or civilized) aborigines.

We have not as yet been able to ascertain, whether the language of the Miautsz is monosyllabic or polysyllabic. The few words we have seen of their own language incline us to believe, that it is monosyllabic, like the Tibetan. Ritter, Windischmann and Feldhoff, who consider these tribes to be of the same race with the Tibetans, base their opinion chiefly upon the probable route of their migration, and hence conclude, that the language of the Miautsz belongs to the monosyllabic class.

The history of the 100 families, so far as we accept it as authentic, constitutes the history of China. Their superior intellect and civilization impressed upon the conquered tribes their own character. Their institutions became the laws of the empire; and though founded on the patriarchal system, the Hamitic element, or the more democratic form of government, had sufficient weight in their councils to assert the right of the conquered and to make the supreme powers acknowledge the vox populi to be the vox Dei.

That the Chinese belong to the Mongolian stock is proved by their complexion, by the pyramidal shape of their skull, by their oblique eyes, and by their prominent cheek-bones. Whether the hundred families were Shemites or Japhetites, matters little, for their number appears to have been too small to produce a new race approaching nearer to the Caucasian type, than to that of their immediate neighbours.

Once established in their present locality and surrounded by wandering hords, they felt little inclination to go abroad or to mix with their less civilized neighbours. There was little to tempt them to conquest; hence their whole warfare with their neighbours was defensive.

The great extent of their country gave to the population of almost each province a peculiar character, which after being once established, appears in the form of small nationalities, as we meet them in Germany, Japan, and recently in an incipient state in the U. S. of America.

The difference of climate has also produced great difference in their physical form, the inhabitants of the central and northern provinces being on the average taller and the women more corpulent than those of Kwangtung, Kwangsi and other southern provinces. The physical aspect of the country has in the same manner induced them to pursue different avocations. The inhabitants along the flats of Pechili, of the south of Shantung and Kiangsu are less enterprising than those of Chikiang, Fukien and Kwangtung; hence the language of the former is more uniform, whilst from Shanghai downwards along the coast almost each port has its own dialect, differing as much from that of its neighbours as the varieties of the Romanic and Germanic tongues.

Whether the striking difference of features of the Manchu and Japanese is owing to an early intercourse with the Caucasian race, can only be ascertained after a more intimate acquaintance with their language, legends and history. The many Greek and Gothic words in the Manchu language point to their intercourse with those nations, and lead us to conclude, that they formed a considerable contingent of the invaders of the west between the fourth and twelfth centuries of our era.

Before the introduction of Mohammedanism into China, the Chinese appear to have never had direct intercourse with the west. The pottery, snuff-bottles &c. found in Egypt have been carried there by pilgrims to Mecca. Even at this moment we find everywhere Chinese who have visited Mecca, and some under rather precarious circumstances. Those who have not sufficient means to pay their passage from station to station, take with them curiosities, as snuff-bottles or other valuable articles of small compass, which they sell to their fellow pilgrims or to other parties on their route, as opportunities offer. These articles find their way not only to Egypt, but are carried to all the Mohammedan states along the Mediterranean. *

The seclusion of the Chinese as a nation is one of the principal causes of the great uniformity of their physiognomy. We occasionally meet with a person whom a trader has brought from a foreign country, and as these men of mixed origin are chiefly from Java, Singapore, Borneo or the Philippines, they seldom differ much from the Chinese except in having a little darker complexion. The few we have met with were chiefly in Hoklo families, whilst during our short stay in Japan we saw several persons with curly hair, a sufficient evidence of their parents' foreign origin.

Note. The word Miautsz is equivalent with 本地人 Punti jin, both signifying aborigines. The Chinese speak of the Miautsz as we do of uncivilized natives of the soil, whilst Punti jin refers to the civilized natives of the south, i.e., the mixed race, in contradistinction of the later intruders from the north. For further information on the aboriginal tribes see Journal of the North China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Dec. 1859. 廣東新語. 廣東統志.

* The accounts by Julien and others on the snuff-bottles and Chinese pottery have not reached us. The preceding is noted down from personal observation and communications by Chinese pilgrims to Mecca.

We cannot conclude this paragraph without giving the resumé of Dr. Prichard's * observations o the Chinese or Mongolian race in general. "The stature is nearly similar in all these tribes; the Chines being, perhaps, a little taller, and the Malays lower, than the others. In all it is below the Europea standard; the average height of the Siamese is five feet three inches. The complexion in all this grou of nations is lighter than that of most Asiatics on this side of the Ganges, by far the greater number be ing of a yellow colour. . . . . The texture of the skin is remarkably smooth, soft, and shining."

"The whole race displays a remarkable tendency to obesity. The nutritious fluids of the body ar directed towards the surface, distending and overloading the cellular tissues with an inordinate quantit of fat. The muscular textures are in general soft, lax, and flabby, rarely exhibiting that strength o development of outline which marks the finer forms of the human body. In labourers and mechanics particularly among the Chinese, the muscular parts occasionally attain considerable volume, but ver rarely that hardness and elasticity developed by exercise in Europeans. A first aspect gives a false es timate of their physical power. In some the limbs often equal those of Europeans, and particularly th thighs; they may be said to form a squat race."

"The face is remarkably broad and flat; the cheek-bones prominent, large, spreading, and gentl rounded; the glabellum is flat and unusually large; the eyes are in general small; the aperture of the eye lids moderately linear in the Indo-Chinese nations and the Malays, is acutely so in the Chinese, bendin upwards at its outer end; the lower jaw is long, and remarkably full under the zygoma, so as to give t the countenance a square appearance; the nose is rather small than flat, the alae not being distended i any uncommon degree; in a great number of Malays it is largest towards its point; the mouth is larg and the lips [moderately] thick; the beard is remarkably scanty †, consisting only of a few stragglin hairs; the forehead, though broad in a lateral direction, is in general narrow, and the hairy scalp come down very low. The head is peculiar; the antero-posterior diameter being uncommonly short, the ge eral form is rather cylindrical; the occipital foramen is often placed so far back that from the crown t the nape of the neck is nearly a straight line. . . . . The hair is thick, coarse, and lank; its colo is always black. The limbs are thick, short, and stout, and the arms rather out of proportion (?) to t trunk. . . . . The foot is in general small; but the hand is much longer than that of the Bengales The trunk is rather square, being nearly as broad at the loins as over the pectoral muscles. There is i this respect the greatest difference between them and the inhabitants of India, who are in general r markable for small waists. The diameter of the pelvis is particularly large, and the dimensions of t cavity would appear to be somewhat greater than in other races."

"They appear to be calculated for toilsome and laborious exertions; but they have not the ener of European labourers; the greater number are distinguished for mechanical skill and patience rath than for mental capacity; others are equally remarkable for indolence and aversion to labour."

The population of China is another subject of interest; for since the days of Marco Polo, peo at home are accustomed to look upon everything Chinese as being counted by millions. The best a most carefully written work on the population of China is that by Sacharoff, whose long residence Peking had made him acquainted with the most authentic sources, as also with the value we may atta to Chinese documents of that kind.

Sacharoff, whilst admitting that China is densely populated, cannot help entertaining serious dou as to the number of 412 millions as given by the Imperial government. His doubts are chiefly bas upon the fact, that (1) for 1,600 years the population fluctuated between 7 and 75 millions; that (2) t population continued to increase after the amount of taxes and the quantum of crown service had be fixed in perpetuity, on which account the mandarins added to the number of the people ad libitum; a that (3) no census is taken though the increase and decrease of the population is regularly recorded a presented to H. I. Majesty.

In accepting, however, a certain number of inhabitants at a certain date, it does not necessarily f low, that that number must be doubled every hundred years. Where, we ask, is such a normal state peace and prosperity to be found, as to constitute an argument pro or contra the number of a populati at a given time? Not a single nation has had peace for a hundred years; hence the accepted rule h never been tested but on paper.

The increase of a nation is intimately related to the average age the people attain. Both proce from the same source, the relative strength of the constitution, as can be proved from the examp quoted by careful observers. Derham mentions the case of a lady, who died at the age of 93, and h given birth to 16 children, of whom 11 married. Upon her death she had 114 grandchildren, 228 great-grandchildren, and 900 great-great-grandchildren. If we take the age of the lady upon her first marriage at 17, then she had within 76 years 1,258 descendants. Such parents could within 100 years increase 800 fold.

* Natural History of Man.

† There is, however, as much difference among the Chinese as among the Europeans, some of them having a full beard hair all over the body.

The convulsions that have now and then distracted the Chinese empire for a period of from 50 to 80 years, set all our European rules of computation at defiance, as may be seen from the table giving the census for the last 1800 years. For whilst A. D. 2 the population of China is given at 59,594,978 individuals, we have 200 years later only 7,632,881; and whilst the census of A. D. 1712 gives only 24,621,334 individuals, the one published in 1749 gives the population at 177,495,339, or seven times the number of the one published 38 years previously.

We here give the table of the population of China as published by Sacharoff:—

Those who have travelled through the mountainous part of the empire entertain grave doubts respecting the enormous population as given by Lord Macartney and since accepted by the nations of Europe and America. Considering the superficial area, the population can hardly exceed 200 millions, and may at present, in consequence of the rebellion, be even less. The population must continue decreasing, so long as the convulsions in the interior last, trade and industry will constantly be paralized or fluctuate with the fortune of war.

Before we commenced the present Dictionary, we intended to add a short paragraph on the value we may place on the authenticity of Chinese chronology as accepted by western writers; for we observed with deep regret, that there were men even among the promoters of the Christian Religion, who were led astray by the smooth gloss which certain later writers have cast over the ancient records of China. This duty belonging more to the province of historians, has been ably discharged by the Rev. Dr. Legge in his Prolegommena to the Historical Classic. To him and to the Rev. J. Chalmers, the present and future students are greatly indebted for the unwearying zeal and perseverance displayed in their investigation.

Dr. Prichard in referring to this subject says:— "The Chinese have long been the most numerous and powerful of the Indo-Chinese races. Originally, according to their own historians, a small herd of roving barbarians, who wandered about the forest of Shensi, at the foot of the high mountains of the Tibetan border of China, without settled dwellings, clothed in skins, ignorant even of the use of fire (of which no human race has been discovered to be really ignorant,) feeding on insects and roots, more destitute even than the Bushmen or the Australian savages, it was only, if we might credit the childish simplicity of their sacred legends, by listening to the counsels of their emperors or patriarchs, that they gradually emerged from this state of barbarism and, by repeated victories, extended their power over the petty states which now constitute the empire."

Dr. Legge after having waded through their "childish legends" concludes his researches with the following words:— "For myself, I had adopted the chronology of the Septuagint as nearer the truth than that of our present Hebrew Bible, more than five-and-twenty years ago, before it was definitely in my plan of life to come to China as a missionary; but the history of China need not seriously embarrass any one who follows the shortest chronology of Sripture. Writers like Bunsen, who follow the Will-o-the-wisps of their own imagination, may launch their shafts against the intolerance of churches, and narrow-mindedness of missionaries. On Chinese ground we can afford to laugh at their intolerance, each bolt they discharge is mere brutum fulmen; each shaft, imbelle telum."

THE CHINESE LANGUAGE.

• The Chinese language belongs to the monosyllabic tongues and is to the nations of eastern Asia what Sanscrit is to the Aryan or Indo-Germanic, and Hebrew or Chaldee to the Shemitic races.

The monosyllabic tongues are peculiar to those nations, whom we regard as descendants of Ham. Only recently specimens of monosyllabic tongues spoken by nations on the white River in Africa have been published in Dr. Petermann's Geographischen Mittheilungen, of which we give an extract below.

In Eastern Asia we have the Burmese, the Siamese, the Anamese and the Loas, whose original language appears to belong to the same stock as the Chinese.

Der Missionär A. Kaufman, welcher volle drei Jahre am Weissen Fluss gelebt hat, giebt in seinem kürzlich erschienenen Buche: "Das Gebiet des Weissen Flusses nnd dessen Bewohner" (Brixen 1861) einige Notizen über die Dinka-Spache, welche zur Erläuterung des obigen Vokabulars hier am Platze sein möchten. Er sagt:

Die Sprache dieser Neger-Stämme ist eine ganz eigenthümliche. Die Worte derselben sind einsilbig, wie z. B. ran = Mensch, tik = Weib, duk = wiederkehren, lo = gehen, allein mit vielen Diphthongen und Triphthongeu, wie moic = der Mann, Gemahl, kuac = der Tiger, uéi = der Hauch, Athem, neu = das Zeug. Diese Sprache entbehrt aller Zischlaute, wie s, sch, z, was wohl auch daher kommen mag, weil sich die Dinka, wie alle anderen Neger des Weissen Flusses, die vorderen Schneidezähne im Unterkiefer ausreissen und somit beinahe unfähig werden, Zischlaute auszusprechen. Eben so fehlen die Aspirationslaute, wie h und ch; dafür aber haben sie zwei Laute, welche unsere Europäischen Sprachen nicht gemein haben. So hat diese Sprache, und alle Sprachen nach Osten und Westen des Flusses, so viel wir kennen lernten, den Laut ng, wie er als Endlaut im Worte "Ding" vorkommt, und dieses sowohl am Anfang wie am Ende, z. B. ngai = befreien, erlösen, leng = die Trommel, nyang = das Krokodil, ngo! = nimm an! Ferner hat die Dinka Sprache einen Kehllaut ähnlich dem Arabischen غ; wir bezeichnen ihn mit gh, z. B. ghen = ich, ghog = wir, ghok = Kühe, ghet = bis; tsch schreiben wir immer mit c, während dj gleich dsch ausgesprochen wird.

Die Hauptwörter dieser Sprache haben kein Geschlecht, keine Kasus, keinen Artikel und bei vielen ist einfache und vielfache Zahl gleich, man muss Alles nur aus der Zusammensetzung abnehmen. Doch findet sich weiter bei den Nennwörtern die Eigenthümlichkeit, dass bei Zusammenstellung mehrerer derselben und in Verbindung mit den zueignenden Fürwörtern der letzte Buchstabe geändert wird, und zwar in ein n oder ng. Z. B. ut heisst Haus; un-dia, mein Haus; pai heisst Dorf, Land, pad-e-beng das Dorf des Häuptlings, pan-dia * = meine Heimath, mein Vaterland; lec = Zahn, leng-cia = meine Zähne. Nur l, m, n, p, r bleiben unverändert. Auffallend ist die Veränderung, welche die Namen der Familienglieder in possessiver Bedeutung annehmen, z. B. mein Vater va, dein Vater ur, sein Vater un, unser Vater va-da, euer Vater ur-duen; ihr Vater un-den; eben so bei Mutter: meine Mutter ma; deine Mutter mor, seine Mutter mann, unsere Mutter ma-da, eure Mutter mor-dun, ihre Mutter mann-den.

Von Beiwörtern giebt es sehr wenige, denn die meisten derselben sind auch Zeitwörter. Es fehlt dabei wieder jede Änderung, selbst bei Vergleichungen. Das Beiwort steht immer nach dem Hauptworte: z. B. tim adid = ein grosser Baum, yen abi did = er wird gross werden, ran col = ein schwarzer Mensch, koic-gér = weisse Leute.

Bei den Zahlwörtern fehlen die Ordnungszahlen gänzlich, mit Ausnahme der Wörter der Erste und Letzte. Sie stehen nach dem Hauptworte und heissen: 1 tok, 2 rou, 3 dyak, 4 ungvan, 5 dyec, 6 detem, 7 derou, 8 bet, 9 deungvan, 10 tyer, 11 tyer ko tok, 12 tyer ko rou, 20 tyer rou, 30 tyer dyak, 100 tyer nyein, 1000 tyer buot, der Erste tueng der Letzte cyeng.

Wie in allen Sprachen sind auch in der Dinka-Sprache die Fürwörter der schwierigste Theil. Die persönlichen sind: ghen oder an = ich, yin = du, yen = er, sie, sie, ghog = wir, uek = ihr, kek = sie. Die Kasus der Fürwörter drücken sie durch Suffixe aus, die dem Zeitworte angehängt werden, welche sowohl im Dativ als Akkusativ gleich sind. Solche Suffixe sind: a mir, mich; i dir, dich; e ihm, ihn; a uns; o euch; ke sie. Z. B. yek heisst geben, yek-a = gieb mir oder uns, yek-e = gieb ihm u. s. w. Die zueignenden Fürwörter werden ebenfalls durch Suffixe ausgedrückt, und zwar:

Singular		Plural
mein	= dia	meine	= cia
dein	= du	deine	= ku
seine, ihr	= de	seine, ihre	= ke
unser	= da	unsere	= kwa
euer	= dun, = duon	euere	= kun, kuon

Z. B. rap-dia = mein Getreide, guop-du = dein Leib, buong-da = unser Kleid, ghok-cia = meine Kühe, nir-kwa = unsere Mädchen, bain-kuu = euere Häuptlinge. "Es ist mein" heisst ye-ke-dia, "es ist dein" ye-ke-du u. s. w. Wie die Hauptwörter kein Geschlecht haben, so fehlt es natürlich auch bei den Fürwörtern.

Die Zeitwörter leiden je nach Zeit und Bedeutung eine Änderung, doch nur in den Vokalen, nnd selbe bleiben thätig und leidend meistens gleich. Die Dinka haben drei verschiedene Zeiten, sie unterscheiden bloss Vergangenheit, Gegenwart und Zukunft. In der gegenwärtigen setsen sie der Wurzel ein a vor, z. B. a-nin = er schläft, a-luoi = er arbeitet. Die vergangene und künftige Zeit zeigen sie durch ein Hülfszeitwort an, das in der vergangenen ci und in der künftigen bi oder ba lautet. Z. B. ba lo = ich werde gehen, wir werden gehen; yen aci duk = er ist znrückgekommen. Ist aber die Rede verneinend, so steht in der gegenwärtigen Zeit cye, in der vergangenen akei und in der künftigen ci-bi vor dem Zeitworte. Z. B. ghog akei dek = wir haben nicht getrunken, kek aci bi cam = sie werden nicht essen. cye ring = er läuft nicht.

Ferner war uns Deutsehen sehr auffallen der deutsche Satzbau in den einfachen Sätzen, z. B. ghen aci ring cam = ich habe Fleich gegessen. In den zusammengesetzten Sätzen ist er jedoch etwas verschieden.

Um ein Muster dieser Sprache su geben, so folge das Pater Noster, Ave Maria und Credo.

* 本地 pún tí in the Chinese expresses the same.

† Den = 天 Tien, Den, heaven, or God.

All these nations, so far as they are unmixed with Indians, speak a language, which we designate monosyllabic. In Siam, China and other states we can apply this term only to the written language; and even in this we find a great tendency towards the polysyllabic, in the same degree as the style inclines to the popular idiom. Speaking, therefore, of the language in general, the term syllabic is more appropriate and expresses its character more forcibly than the word monosyllabic.

The Chinese being the leaders in civilization in the north, east and north-east of the Hîmalaya mountains, have by their literature, higher state of civilization and greater originality given to their northern neighbours a syllabary in the form of an alphabet, whilst those nations who were nearer to India, adopted with the Buddhist doctrine an alphabet approaching nearer to that of Hindustan.

The syllabic system which extends from China to Japan, and from Japan across the Pacific to Central America and the western territory, now included in the U. S. of America, seems to be intimately connected with the hieroglyphics or ideographic characters, in which the ideas of the people petrefied and thus became true symbols of their stationary character.

The language of these nations may be divided into three classes:—

I. Alphabetic languages with a system of spelling similar to western tongues. Among these we class:—

1. The Tibetan, the Burmese, and the Siamese. The intercourse of these nations with India through the medium of their religion appears to have made them anxious to adopt an orthography of clear, articulated sounds. Hence we not only find in those languages the R immediately following other consonants, but it also seems that they dropped short vowels in words now written with a remarkable accumulation of consonants. This is a prominent feature in the Tibetan language, as will be seen from the following examples: brdsun, bsdams, bszgrags &c.; which words Professor Lepsius thinks may formerly have been written bardsún, basdáms, basgrágas. *

2. The Siamese. In this language we find nearly all the letters of the English Alphabet. The combinations of the consonants resemble those of the western tongues; and there are, as in Chinese, many synonyms (now mere particles) used in the formation of dissyllabic words †. We have also in the Siamese, Burmese, Anamese, and the Shan languages a system of intonation similar to the Chinese, which is another proof of their common origin with the latter race and of their probable migration from the north or north-west of the countries they now inhabit. The changes in their language, religion and race were gradual, because the influx from India during the political convulsions and the religious persecutions never threw at once so large a number of people among them as to destroy their nationality or the character of their language. What the changes of the language were, it is difficult to say. Was it a falling back from a richer, polysyllabic language towards the monosyllabic, as Professor Lepsius supposes, or are the present languages the result of a clumsy effort at imitating the Aryan and Shemitic languages? In the Tibetan language we incline to the views held by Professor Lepsius; but are at a loss to account for the existence of other monosyllabic tongues among nations of the same origin, as well as for the combinations of consonants in Siamese, because before the introduction of Buddhism they not only used the Chinese characters, but must also have had sounds more similar to that tongue, unless we discover a language among the aborigines in the south of China with a monosyllabic tongue and with all the consonants of western languages. If such a tribe still exist, that would give us the key to the changes the Punti and other southern dialects have undergone subsequent to their intermixture with their conquerors from the north.

II. The second class of syllabic languages are the Mongolian, the Manchu, the Corean, the Japanese, and most of the languages of the American Indians.

1. The Mongolian and Manchu languages differ from the Tibetan in their combination of consonants. The R never combines with another consonant either at the commencement or at the end of a syllable. Even in such words as bear great resemblance to the Gothic or Greek, and which it would appear they retained after their expulsion from the west, they have dropped the first consonant, when two followed each other, as e. g. in Manchu cholo, Greek σχολη.

2. The Japanese whose intercourse with foreign nations has been chiefly confined to Corea, China, the Philippines and Siam, have retained a more purely syllabic language than the Mongols and Manchu. They find great difficulty in spelling western words, because in their own language, as in northern Chinese and in the languages of most of the American Indians not a single consonant terminates a syllable but the N. In all other respects their language is as characteristically Tartar as their own features;

* Lepsius: Über Chinesische and Tibetische Lautverhältnisse, &c.

† The orthography of the Romanized Siamese, as introduced and partly clung to by the American missionaries is truly pitiable and defies even the most ancient German we meet with in books and manuscripts of earlier days. If we can write "Prince Somdeth Choufa chulalon Kom," why should we write Sŏmdĕt P'ra Ramësó-ðàn?" The latter system of orthography is truly formidable and reminds us of the darkest ages, when the art of writing was quite a novelty.

and bears already marks of a transition as met with among the tribes inhabiting the Sandwich and other Islands of the Pacific. For whilst the Chinese cannot pronounce a pure R, the Japanese always substitute an R for an L at the commencement of a word. They read 里 rí instead of lí, as the Chinese, and ro, instead of lo. The Sandwich Islanders distinguish with great difficulty between the L and R.

Whatever intercourse the Indians of America may have had with Europeans, the number of the latter has never been large enough to deprive their language of the syllabic character. The Japanese words that have recently been discovered in the Californian Indian Dialect, and the fact that the written characters of Central America have been found to be composed on the same principle as the Chinese, i. e. that they are hieroglyphic ideographs with radicals, relatives or determinatives, points to a western origin and a connection and relationsship with the Japanese and Chinese. This leads us back to the nation whose language we have endeavoured to bring to the knowledge of the foreigners in the present work.

III. The third class of syllabic languages and still using the hieroglyphic ideographs, is the Chinese. It is divided into as many dialects as the Romanic and Germanic tongues. By far the greater portion of the people speak the 官話 kwan hwa or Mandarin dialect, which may in importance be compared to the high German, as at present spoken by the greater portion of the educated people of Germany. The Mandarin tongue is the language of the empire except in Yunnan, Kwangsi, Kwangtung, Fukien, Ningpo and Shanghai. The information we have received from the various parts of the empire, leads us to the conclusion, that fully three fourths of the population speak the Mandarin dialect, or that the subordinate dialects stand in relation to the language of the empire as Dutch, Swedish, and Danish to high German.

The great diversity of dialects in the south and along the coast as far as Shanghai are, with the exception of the Punti and Fukien, spoken by a comparatively small number of people.

The Punti is the dominant dialect of Kwangtung and Kwangsi, and yet fully one third of the population of Kwangtung speak either Hakka, a dialect nearly allied to the southern Mandarin, or Tie chiú, a sister dialect of the Fukien, noted for the large number of its nasal sounds.

If we deduct the dialects which are only spoken by a few hundred thousands or a million of people, such as the Shanghai and Ningpo dialects, then we have :—

1. The Punti, which in sound may be compared to high German;
2. The Hakka, which in sound resembles the Swedish and Danish;
3. The Fukien or Hoklo, which we would call the Chinese French; and
4. The southern and northern Mandarin dialects, which, with their large number of gutturals or fricative sounds resemble more the Dutch of the Germanic language.

The Punti or Canton dialect is that spoken by the race, who according to Chinese accounts, is the result of the intermarriage of the aborigenes with the invaders of their territory, which is put down as between B. C. 220-250. The dialect of this race is the best articulated of all the dialects we have heard. It has eight distinct tones, only a few diphthongs, and besides the nasal Ng there is not a single sound that occasions any difficulty of pronunciation to a foreigner. The number of words or syllables of this dialect is 700 in Dr. Williams' Tonic Dictionary, and are represented in the following table : —

* Sounds without characters.

If we add to these the syllables terminating in eng instead of ing, under which head they are at present placed, then we have 729 syllables or words representing the whole material for oral communication. Among these there are for the first three tones 384; for the fourth 187; and aspirated words 158.

In subdividing the aspirated words and by adding them to the first two classes, we get 498 syllables for the first three tones, and 231 for the second. 498 multiplied by 6 (three upper and three lower tones) give 2,988 syllables; the 231 multiplied by 2 (the higher and lower fourth tone) give 462 syllables, and the two together a total of 3,450 different sounds.

Upon closer examination we find, however, a different result; for not half the syllables assume all the 6 tones of the first class, nor the two of the second, as will be seen from the following table:—

From this table it will be seen that there are only 1755 words in use. If we divide these by 700 or 729, we have only 2½ monosyllabic words for each sound or syllable.

This number would answer all purposes of savages; but not a nation as civilized as the Chinese. We must, therefore, be prepared to meet among the spoken language a large number of compounds forming dissyllabic and trisyllabic words. These are, so far as the uneducated are concerned, almost as unchangeable as the words in western tongues. Hence a person living among the people and learning the language from the women and unlettered, speaks the same with greater accuracy than those who acquire it from a teacher. For the first attempt at learning to read books brings a stranger into the labyrinth of characters of the same meaning and of their constant mutations and combinations. In opening a dictionary he will be quite bewildered when attempting to select the character he wants; for he may rest assured that half the number he chooses are not understood by the illiterate. His difficulties increase as he advances in his study, unless he has a teacher about him to correct every mistake he makes.

On the other hand, should he first learn the colloquial and then apply his material to books written and published without a comma or full stop, and in which he finds different compounds and of a different signification, he then perceives, that he is as far from a knowledge of Chinese as when he commenced his hic hæc hoc of Latin. For he will read almost every period as a person would the following English translation of a German rhyme, when printed without interpunction:—

A person wrote upon the sand
Ten fingers have I on each hand
Five and twenty on hands and feet
Let those who doubt with commas read.

The 700 syllables or sounds in the Canton dialect are the result of the combination of the 23 initials with the 53 finals, and given in the following table. We have arranged them alphabetically.

Intonation.

The tones of the Canton or Punti dialect are called

1. 平聲 ‚p'ing ‚shing,	3. 去聲 hü' ‚shing, and
2. 上聲 ʻshéung ‚shing,	4. 入聲 yap‚ ‚shing.

THE UPPER TONES are marked

THE LOWER TONES are marked (box with marks at the corners)

1. 上平聲 shéung^2 ‚p'ing ‚shing	1. 下平聲 há^2 ‚p'ing ‚shing
2. 上上聲 shéung^2 shéung^2 ‚shing	2. 下上聲 há^2 shéung^2 ‚shing
3. 上去聲 shéung^2 hü' ‚shing	3. 下去聲 há^2 hü' ‚shing
4. 上入聲 shéung^2 yap‚ ‚shing.	4. 下入聲 há^2 yap‚ ‚shing.

The ‚p'ing ‚shing is uttered with a peremptory voice, e.g. Go!

The ʻshéung ‚shing or rising tone is uttered with an interogative modulation of the voice, e.g. Is it nice? Is the weather fine?

The hü' ‚shing is the optative or wish form, e.g. Do love me?

The yap‚ ‚shing terminates in the Puntí and Hakka dialects always in p, t or k; hence it is easily distinguished.

THE HIGH TONES.

‚Chín, ʻchín, chín', chít‚ 氈展戰折 blanket; to unroll; to fight; to break.
‚Kám, ʻkám, kám', kap‚ 緘減鑒甲 to seal; to contract; a mirror; armor.

THE LOWER TONES.

‚Lín, ʻlín, lín^2, lít‚ 連璉練列 to connect; to remove; to select; to arrange.
‚Wan, ʻwan, wan^2, wát‚ 云允運滑 to say; to grant; to revolve; slippery.

The 平聲 ‚p'ing ‚shing is called the even tone, and the three others 仄聲 chak‚ ‚shing or deflected tones.

These tones should be carefully learnt; for if in any dialect they are of great importance, they are certainly so in Punti. Former scholars, and particularly Dr. Morrison, have not only themselves neglected this duty, but have also induced others to pay no attention to the same; hence their failure in speaking the Chinese language intelligibly.

How the tones frequently change the meaning of words, may be seen from the following examples.

惡 { ‚Ú an interrogative particle; Ú' to hate; Ok‚ bad, wicked.

爲 { ‚Wai to do, to be; Wai^2 on account of.

好 { ʻHò good. Hò' to love.

The Aspirates.

The aspirates are of as much importance in conveying our ideas intelligibly as the tones, and we cannot sufficiently impress the students of the Chinese language with the necessity of paying strict attention to them.

EXAMPLES.

‚Tám 担 to carry	‚T'ám 貪 to covet
Táp‚ 答 to answer	T'áp‚ 塔 a pagoda
Tò' 到 to arrive at	T'ò' 吐 to vomit
Pik‚ 逼 to oppress	P'ik‚ 辟 a prince
‚Chái 齋 to abstain from	‚Ch'ái 差 a commissioner

In the preceding examples the sound and quantity of the vowels are the same, the tones are also identical, the distinction of meaning being conveyed by the aspirates.

The Vowel Sounds.

The following examples differ in the sound of the vowels, by which the difference of meaning is conveyed to the ear.

EXAMPLES.

1. Narrow or Common Sound.	2. Broad Sound.
Ai' 縊 to strangle	Ái' 隘 a pass, a defile
Ak‚ 握 to grasp	Ák‚ 厄 a bracelet
ʻAm 掩 to cover with the hand	ʻÁm 函 an unopened flower
Kau' 救 to save to rescue	Káu' 教 to teach

3. Difference in the quantity of Vowels.

EXAMPLES.

Short Sound.	Long Sound.
ˏSam 心 the heart	ˏSám 三 three
ˏKam 金 gold metal	ˏKám 監 to inspect

Proper attention paid to these distinctions at the commencement of study, will enable the student to avoid many errors so frequently fallen into by persons unwilling to follow the advice of experienced scholars.

ORTHOGRAPHY.

The orthography of this Dictionary is, with few variations, that adopted by Dr. Williams in his Tonic Dictionary and represented in the following table.

System of Orthography for the Punti or Canton Dialect.

THE VOWELS.

1. a—as in quota;
2. á—as in father;
3. e—as in men, dead;
4. é—at in they, neigh; should be ä
5. i—as in pin;
6. í—as ine in machine, feel;
7. o—as in long, lord, law;
8. ò—as in so, hoe;
9. u—as in bull;
10. ú—as in school, rule;
11. ü—as in German, or L'une in French;
12. ù—as ö in German, or turn;
13. ai—as in while, high, fly;
14. ái—as in aisle, aye;
15. au—as in German, and broader than round in English.
16. áu—broader than howl in English;
17. éu—as in Capernaum;
18. iú—as if written éeú, different from pew, chew;
19. oi—as in boy, toil;
20. ui—as in Louis;
21. úi—as in woing, chewing;
22. as—zz in the first syllable of dizzy;
23. 'm—less aspirated than the Interjection hm;
24. 'ng—like the French nasal in encore;

THE CONSONANTS.

ch—as in church;
f—as in fife;
h—as in have;
k—as in king:
kw—as in quality;
l—as in lame;
m—as in maim;
n—as in nun;
ng— as in sing;
p—as in pap;
s—as in sea;
sh—as in shut, chaise;
t—as in title;
ts—as in ratsbane, wits;
w—as in wing or the German West;
y—as in yard;

It will at once be seen that many diacritical marks can be dispensed with. The accent over é in shéung, héung, over ú in kiú, hiú, and the apostrophe before 'ng, 'm, or after sz' can only serve a foreigner for a short time; for a native they are utterly useless, and should not be used in Romanized Chinese. In the present Dictionary the (') before m and after sz has been dropped.

THE HAKKA DIALECT.

The population of this province speaking the Hakka dialect is estimated at from 3—4 millions individuals. They are a more hardy race than the Punti and none of their women have small feet. Whenever they occupy a district in common with the Punti and in equal number, their villages bear a great contrast to those of the former, being in every respect inferior and the children less educated. They appear to have been for many centuries in undisturbed possession of the north-eastern part of this province, and are noted for their roving propensity and turbulent character.

They have from time to time spread over other parts of this province, where they are almost always living in open hostility with the Punti.

But not all those who have left their native place and moved to other parts of this province, belong to the Hakka population. The many thousands who last year fled from Sinning, were Hoklo and not Hakka, and spoke, besides the latter dialect, still their own, though more than five generations had passed by since their migration. The constant hostility in which they lived with their neighbours had induced or rather compelled them to abandon the practice of binding the feet of their children and of allying themselves with the Hakka, though the customs of the Hoklo population differ more from them than those of the Punti.

The Hakka dialect has 6 tones, only the first and the fourth having the lower tone *.

According to the modulation of the voice the 去聲 of the Hakka resembles the 上平聲 of the Punti; the 上聲 of the Hakka resembles the 下平聲 of the Punti; the 平聲 of the Hakka resembles the 去聲 of the Punti.

I here give the syllabary of the Hakka dialect as compiled by the Rev. R. Lechler, who has kindly placed the same at my disposal.

Note. The Romanized Hakka is successfully taught in the schools of the Basel Ev. Mission, and several books are printed according to Dr. Lepsius' new system of orthography.

* See page 4 under Accent.

The Fukien, Hoklo and Amoy Dialects.

All these dialects are closely allied and noted for the large number of their nasal sounds, or rather a tendency to pronounce the finals N and Ng like the French in chien, goétien &c.

These terminations are in most instances dropped, and the nasal sound is nothing but an open vowel sound uttered with more or less aspiration through the nose.

Instead of marking this nasal sound by a small raised n, as has been done by Dr. Medhurst and others, any diacritical mark above or beneath the vowel would suffice to indicate its pronunciation.

Another characteristical difference of these dialects is the substituting of a B for the M of almost all other dialects in China, as also a frequent changing of the Ch into a T, as 茶 Punti ch'á, Hakka ts'á, Mandarin ch'á, Fukien té, or Thee in German.

The Fukien and sister dialects belong to the same stock as the other dialects of China. The grammatical construction is the same as in the Mandarin, Punti and Hakka. But wealth and an early intercourse with foreign nations have had considerable influence on the refinement of the colloquial, as well as on the manners and habits of the people. In cleanliness they excel most of their neighbours, and in their social intercourse more polite terms are heard than even among the Punti. These characteristic features being the natural consequence of their intercourse with foreign nations, I am inclined to ascribe the remarkable difference of these dialects from the rest of China to the same source.

Any person anxious to learn more respecting the people of Fukien and their dialects, will do well to consult Dr. Medhurt's Dictionary of the Hokien Dialect, and Goddard's Chinese and English Vocabulary of the Tie Chiu Dialect.

The Mandarin or Court Dialect.

The Mandarin or Court Dialect has derived its designation from the Chinese term 官話 kwan hwá, i.e. official language, because a sentence passed by a Mandarin being only considered valid when pronounced in that dialect.

In the north and particularly among officials, it is called 正音, i.e. the correct sound, and signifying the proper language of the country, it being spoken by at least three fourths of the population.

The Mandarin Dialect is divided into the 北話 Peh hwá, northern language, and the 南話, southern language or dialect. As the dialect spoken at Canton is considered the standard of Punti, so are the dialects spoken at Peking and Nanking respectively regarded as the standards of authority of the Mandarin.

The further we proceed to the north, the more does the Chinese language assume the form of the Japanese and American Indian syllabic system. No consonant terminates a syllable but the N and the nasal Ng. The tones are reduced to four, the smallest number in any dialect of China; hence for intelligibleness the spoken language is chiefly dependent on the combination of synonyms.

The large number of guttural or fricative sounds and the many diphthongs, which are constantly heard, deprive the Mandarin dialect much of its euphony. If to these defects is added the tendency of the northern people to change the k into a sound similar to tsj (German pronunciation), little is left that falls gracefully on the ear, or removes the aversion of foreigners to acquire this difficult tongue.

The following table exhibiting the syllabary of the Mandarin Dialect, is composed according to Dr. Williams' orthography as adopted in his Tonic Dictionary. It contains 459 syllables, whilst Dr. Morrison has only 411 and Mr. Wade 397.

In order to assist the student in comprehending the phonetic differences, I give here first the syllabary of Dr. Williams, and then Mr. Wade's with the corresponding orthography of Williams and Morrison.

The Origin of the Written Language.

Few of those who at present use the various alphabets of Europe and Western Asia, ever think that the original form of the same was hieroglyphic. The א aleph of the Hebrew language was nothing but the figure of the head of an ox and was rudely written as the following representation . Later it was changed into this form, giving merely the outline of the face and the four extremities representing the ears and the horns. But even this form was found inconvenient, on which account the Greek changed it into the following figure α. The Latin races not satisfied with this change, turned the head upside down and wrote simply this A, which form is still preserved in our ornamental 𝒜.

If we proceed to India and Tibet we find the ancient Hebrew and Arabic alphabets transformed into the most fanciful characters, but with full phonetic power, such as attracts the admiration of the most profound linguists of Europe.

All these nations, however, only used the few hieroglyphics as simple phonetics in the same manner as we now draw the picture of a cat in order to teach a child the letter C.

The Epyptians, who appear to be of the same origin with the bulk of the Chinese population, perpetuated this system in their hieroglyphics, sounding only the first letter of each word in their phonetic representations.

In China the only system approaching to this is the combination of initials and finals, i. e. one character representing the initial and the other the final. Thus the sound of the character 韠 pí is represented by 兵 ping, the p being the initial; and by 媚 mí, the i being the final, the two sounds combined giving pí, the proper pronunciation of the character 韠.

This system did, however, not originate with the Chinese, but was introduced with Budhism, which was first taught in China A.D. 65. This syllabic spelling extended throughout China, was very prevalent about A.D. 500 and is adopted in the Imperial Dictionary of Kanghi to give the correct pronunciation of the characters.

From this clumsy mode of representing the living tongue the Egyptians advanced to the ideographic system as we now find the same in China and Central America. The characters formed according to this system are composed of a compound either phonetic or descriptive, having a determinative (radical, key or relative) defining the meaning. The Egyptian word hat, silver, is composed of white and a spade, the determinative of all metals. In China, silver is frequently called 白銀 white silver or white currency, and the character is composed of 艮, a limit, and 金, the determinative of metals. It is therefore represented as a metal of limited value, the same having probably at an early date been fixed as a standard of local currency and as distinguished from the coined copper money.

We thus see two nations remote from each other first drawing rude pictures as a means of conveying their ideas to their fellowmen. But whilst the Egyptians took recourse to a kind of mimic writing, the Chinese at an early period advanced to the ideographic system and carried it to the highest perfection, it being well adapted as a means of intercommunication in public and private life. But with all the encouragement given to the cultivation of letters, the Chinese could never be called a literary nation in the present acceptation of the word, the difficulty of acquiring the ideographs remaining a permanent impediment to general education.

The ideographs or picture writing of Central America and Mexico cannot be taken into account, because the first inhabitants of that continent having evidently come from Eastern Asia and a few from Europe, They brought their knowledge of writing from the place of their former homes and connections and continued the same without improving the art.

The recent discovery in Central America of a Dictionary with a key to the composition of the the characters, will greatly assist us in settling the question whether the Mexicans came from the East or from the West, and thus reduce the limits of uncertainty respecting the origin of nations to a smaller compass.

But whatever means may have been invented for the cultivation of letters, none has been able to place general education within the reach of the poor. This must be accomplished by Romanizing the language. If we take the average number of educated people in China, we shall scarcely yet 10 per cent. Those who have hitherto read books to any useful purpose, have been obliged to spend more time on their acquisition than if they had learned two dialects to perfection.

The notion now prevalent in Europe and propagated by a few of the students of the Chinese language, that the Chinese characters are necessary and useful, is not confirmed by practical experience. For if we accept a per centage of even 20 educated men, then we have 80 to whom the written characters are as unintelligible as Hebrew or Russian, but two thirds of whom would, besides their own, acquire the Mandarin Dialect as easily as most of the Germanic population now learn to read, write and speak high German. Such a system would enable every man and woman to read a book for edification and improvement, whilst those who now claim any degree of education, would add to the knowledge of the written language the acquisition of the spoken. The local brogues of Germany differ more from high German than the various local dialects do from the Mandarin, and yet there is not a man nor a woman in Germany who does not understand a person speaking high German in its purity.

An attempt at Romanizing various dialects and of teaching the same even to aged women has been very successful, though the orthography adopted has been far from practical or satisfactory. The reason of not adopting Professor Lepsius' alphabet has frequently been owing to want of funds for purchasing a fount of types, as also to a lack of farsightedness on the part of the agents who had it in their power to recommend the same to their respective Boards. Many societies and individuals had gone to great expenses in getting matrixes for a complete fount of types and could not so readily prepare or purchase a new set. This is the reason why the author of this work was unable to follow Dr. Lepsius' system of orthography. But each society might get a small fount of Dr. Lepsius' types for the publication of small Christian and Educational works to be used in the schools, and I cannot but earnestly recommend this step to all that are in any way interested in the future welfare of the Chinese.

In order to make the new graphic system as intelligible as possible, let all nouns be written and printed with capital letters, and the synonyms used as compounds be joined into one dissyllabic word. That will greatly assist the native and foreign students in arriving at the meaning of a word or sentence and prevent the constant transposition of the characters. After one generation many of the useless synonyms would have become obsolete, whilst those in use would become more stereotyped and hence be more readily understood by the natives and foreigners.

For further information on this point see Standard Alphabet, by C. R. Lepsius, D.PH., D.D. Second Edition—London and Berlin 1863.

* In the Court dialect the character 子 tsz is added to the noun, or we may say that in that dialect with or without the classifier most nouns end in 子 tsz, as:— 法子 fáh tsz, a law, a pattern; 房子 fáng tsz, a room; 帽子 máu tsz, a cap, a hat &c. Writers on this dialect should study this subject more carefully and point it out to the students, or commence making a collection of the words which absolutely require the ending in 子.

‡ 棄 is more frequently used with reference to property and other objects, 捨 with reference to affection.

§ As an attribute abandoned is in colloquial expressed by 的 being added to all the compounds given under this head, as: 放僻的; when 人 is added to 的, or 者 substituted for 的人, it signifies an abandoned, dissolute, or depraved fellow.

* We must here once for all remark, that substantives can only be recognised by their position and by the predicate. Thus 棄者 may mean the abandoner, abandonment or abandoning. In speaking of abandonment in a bad sense, we would say 棄者是棄親之敝也 The abandonment (we speak of) is the vice of abandoning one's relatives; in speaking of the abandoner, we would say, 棄其親者不足稱爲人也 The abandoner of his relatives is not worthy to be called man. In a third form of construction the substantive is expressed in the possessive case, as:—爾之棄親者 the abandonment of your relatives, or the fact of your abandoning your relatives &c. Hence if we wish to comment on the substantive, 者 always follows the word it so qualifies; but if we wish to comment on the actor or on the action, the object, often preceded by the possessive 的, 之, comes between the verb, adjective &c., and the relative pronoun 者 forming the substantive.

* 院 is sometimes pronounced ˊün in Canton.

† The adjective terminations cannot be expressed otherwise than by the simple noun. When, therefore, a quality of a noun is to be expressed, another noun with or without the possessive 之, 的 or (in Punti) 嘅 precedes the same and assumes the quality of an adjective, as:—肚腹, the abdomen, 肚腹臟腑 the abdominal viscera. 屬 belonging to, is often used to change the noun into an adjective. The predicative adjective leaves the noun unchanged, as:—善 goodness, 是善 to be good. Euphony and perspicuity, however, demand sometimes the addition of 的, or in Punti Colloquial 嘅, as:—惡的, 惡嘅.

* The Engl. acre is 160 square rods or 4,840 square yards. The Chinese mau is variously stated: Medhurst, following the Board of Revenue, gives the mau at 7,260 square feet, or $\frac{1}{6}$ of an Engl. acre; Williams (Vocabulary of the Canton Dialect) gives the mau at 733$\frac{1}{3}$ square yards or 6 to an Engl. acre. In the "Commercial Guide" p. 287 he gives the average of 6 to 6.1 mau to an Engl. acre, which gives 13.216 inches Engl. measure to the Chinese chih (foot), As almost each province has its standard measure, a foreigner, in purchasing land, must either specify the measure to be used or he must be satisfied with the one adopted by the treaty powers.

* Chinese names or signboards consisting only of two characters, they often present a pair of scrolls, the uppermost characters of which (being the first of the Rhyme) form the name of the person to whom the poem alludes.

* The preceding terms may be considered so far local, as the people of this province were the first who learnt the art of debasing metal from foreigners: and the Macao alloy may be taken as a proof, that the Portuguese are up to this moment the principal manufacturers of false coin, for the Chinese declare themselves helpless in the art of producing that nicety of foreign letters and designs as will ensure deception.
